LES BAINS

Hotel

Les Bains has been something of a chameleon over the centuries, and its storied past has placed it in the epicentre of Parisian culture. Once a 19th century public bathhouse where Marcel Proust used to bathe, it was transformed into a legendary club oft-compared to Studio 54 in the 80s. Today, it's been reborn as a luxury boutique hotel. Its rooms and suites have been elegantly furnished using raw materials like Carrara marble and mahogany, while finer details like sumptuous velvet sofas in jewel tones allude to its decadent history. Downstairs, the spacious restaurant and bar are furnished with checkered flooring and undulating ceilings that appear to form the shape of giant water drops – perhaps an ode to the building's first life. The latest incarnation of Les Bains retains its bohemian edge, and provides an ideal base from which to explore the city.
